Killson declared that he politely requested to be allowed to pass with the lady, when sievin rudely punched her with his arm.

Words were exchanged and Ellison struck Sievin with his stick, cutting a gash over slevin's right temple. He was arrested and locked up in the West Thirtieth street station. Friends from the Manhattan Club endeavored to secure his release on ball, but were unsuccessful.

Sievin was in court this morning to press his charge, a big piece of court plaster covering his wound, but at Lawyer Moss's request the examination was adjourned and Ellison was paroled in the lawyer's custody.

He Was Arrested.

An athletic, well-dressed man, who, when arrested, gave his name as Frank Livingston, of 324 West Thirty-second street, was to-day held for examination in Jefferson Market Court, charged with assaulting Hugh Slevin, a salcon-keeper at 211 Bleecker street.

Lawyer Joe Moss, who appeared for the prisoner, said his client's correct name was Frank Killson, and that he was a broker, a member of the Manhattan Club and a friend of Bermann Oelrichs.

Ellison said he had dined with a lady at the Brunawjck last night, and was crossing trends.

Killson declared that he politely requested to be allowed to pass with the lady, when slevin's right temple. He was arrested and locked up in the West Thirtteth street station. Friends from the Manhattan Club endeavored to secure his release on bail, but were unsuccessful.

Six weeks ago, however, she left him, going to live with the family of Mr. Sperry. A short time previous the couple's two boys, aged respectively eleven and four years, were placed in an institution.

Since his wite left him Downward has repeatedly importuned her to return to live with him. The couple strolled down to a law party in progress at the Church of St. Francis De Sales on Broadway near Fairfax street. About 9.45 they left, and on the way home Downward continued to urge his wite to live with him, but she reclused.

Both were noticed, as they reached the residence, 32 Cooper street, to be arguing, the bushand gesticulating wildly. In the iront of the Sperry home there is a vestibule, with an inner and an outer door. Downward to sked his wife to live with him, pointing the weapon directly at her face.

Ex-Mayor Grace had labored hard to establish an organization, and, having established it, the question was what should become of it now, the object for which it was established, the pomination of Mr. Cleveland, having been accomplished. That question was the chief subject under discussion. As it is said that it is not the intention to put a local ticket in the field, the continuance of the organization, it was believed, by some of Mr. Cleveland's friends would be considered a menace to the regular Democracy, and might result in injuring Mr. Cleveland's chances.

A compromise, which seemed to meet with general favor, was proposed. It was to the offset that the 200,000 or more who, it is claimed, signed the call for the Syracuse Convention be organized as Cleveland and Stevenson clubs, and thus the organization should be kept alive.

far seen in New York had struck them as so remarkable as the Fullizer building.
The view from the dome elicted exclamations of delight. The air this morning was particularly clear, and a distinct view could be had of the country within a radius of twenty-aive miles.

Many of the visitors who were lamiliar by hear ay with many of the points of interest in New York had the guide point them out from the botty lookout on the dome.

A place which amazed the visitors was the pressertom, with its enormous presses turning out 5.000 copies of The Evening World

Diana, the golden goddess on the towor the morning shone more triumphantly than ever as she looked down on the strange gathering in the ampitheatre below and resilized that for once, at least, she had presided over one assemblace that was far from heatherish in human throats for pipes that interpreted its melody.

So grand was the singing and so powerful its influence that the participants themselves were moved and with relutance turned to the exercises of the "Pastor's Hour," conducted by Rev. B. B. Tyler, D. D., President of the New York Christian Endeavor Union.

Dr. Tyler is a white-haired, kindly-faced old man with a keen sense of humor as well as a dignified and earnest demeanor.

He announced that clerical representatives of different denominations would be given just two minutes each to tell what their denominations thought of the Christian Endeavor movement, and at the expiration of their allotted time they must stop or he would "knock them down," figuratively, with the gavel centaining wood and stone from the Williston Church at Portland, Me., where the first Christian Endeavor Society was founded.
